The proposal is judged on the basis of its significance to the practice of design and should suitably justify the need for the investigation the candidate wishes to undertake. The proposal should explain how the research is relevant and how it could make an original contribution to the field of design. An outline of the proposed methods to be used must shed light on the feasibility and suitability of their approach.

This year, research proposals are invited in (but not restricted to) the following areas: Design Education (e.g., pedagogy, design for schools), Design Innovation (e.g., in Railways), Social Innovation (e.g., crafts and culture), and Design Practice.

 - i. In case of practice-based research, how the practice and research objectives relate to each other

- B. The candidate's skills, knowledge and research or work experience relevant to the study (This would count for 20% of the score for candidates who do not have to give the DRT).

The proposal will be verified using an anti-plagiarism tool to check the originality of the proposal.

2. Design Research Test (DRT):

The Design Research Test (DRT) would be conducted in an online format.

Candidates with less than 15 years of post-eligibility criteria experience must take the Design Research Test (DRT) as mentioned earlier in the section Stages of Selection of this handbook. Design professionals meeting the eligibility requirements detailed in Section 5.1 of this document and with more than 15 years of post-eligibility criteria experience are exempted from the DRT. They would be directly eligible to appear for the interview, on evaluation of their submitted proposal alone.

4. The Ph.D. Programme

4.1 About PhD in Design at NID

Design is the professional capability of creating and developing context-led concepts and translating them into tangible solutions for the benefit of people, society, industry and the environment. The design of objects, communication, services, interface and their systems requires in-depth analysis and the creative synthesis of information and ideas based on a variety of disciplines and experiences. Design thinking brings together the finest sensibilities of the arts, the logic of science and the functional pursuits of technology in an innovative framework.

At the heart of all of NID's academic programmes and activities are the values of 'learning by doing' and 'learning from the field'. The curriculum and pedagogy at Bachelor's and Master's levels offered at the Institute have uniquely evolved from a value based interdisciplinary approach to creative problem solving wherein research is integral to the process of design.

NID's Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) degree in Design shall be awarded for an advanced and detailed in-depth research study of any particular aspects of Design that the candidate feels have hitherto not been studied and which culminates with a thesis that extends the body of knowledge and the application of design thinking, process and practice. In the case of a practice-based PhD, such work might be centred around a creative outcome of the candidate's professional practice.

The programme is open to educators and professionals in design and allied creative fields who wish to undertake theoretical study of their own practice or knowledge base and push the boundaries of the discipline.

4.2 Aims and Goals

The PhD programme in Design aims to promote deep reflection, inquiry, and rigor in the development and dissemination of new ideas, expressions and skills in the field of design and allied fields and shall lead to their meaningful manifestations in the form of new design collections, objects, communication, services, strategies, etc. The work shall contribute new theories and knowledge to design, design education and design practice.

The purpose of the programme is to better the understanding and use of design in industry, education and society at large.

4.3 Objectives

1. To foster original research and create new knowledge about the nature and practice of design.
2. To engage in a deeper understanding of expressions, methods and the role of design in problem-solving activity.
3. To foster NID's pedagogic principles of 'Learning to Know' and 'Learning to Do' .
4. To enable collaboration in research, scholarship, design development and service.
5. To enable students to engage in advanced research and practice with design theorists and practitioners in a broad variety of fields.
6. To contribute towards the Institute's objective of design for dignity and service to society, and to participate in meaningful design for change and sustainability.

4.4 Modes of the PhD in Design

The PhD programme in Design may be undertaken in one of the modes given here:

Practice-based Research: Original investigation undertaken in order to gain new knowledge partly by means of practice and the outcomes of that practice. Such research includes practice as an integral part of its method and often falls within the general area of action research outcomes. Creative outcomes may be in the form of artefacts such as objects, images, film, fashion, music, design collections, models, samples, prototypes, digital media, performances and exhibitions or other outcomes. The doctoral submissions for this kind of research must include contextualisation of the creative work.

Theory-led Research: It would be concerned with the nature of practice and lead to new knowledge that has operational significance for that practice. The main focus is to advance knowledge about practice, or to advance knowledge within practice. Such research may be fully described in text form in the doctoral thesis, without the inclusion of a creative outcome.
